

Using Commas for Introductory Phrases

- A phrase is a small group of words that are not a complete sentence.

the new girl unfamiliar with the name

- A phrase at the beginning of a sentence is an introductory phrase. Writers use introductory phrases to vary sentence length and make sentences interesting.
- Use a comma to set off an introductory phrase at the beginning of a sentence.

After a time, María Isabel talked to her parents.

Living nearby, María Isabel was able to walk to school.

1. After moving across town María Isabel switched schools.

2. With two other girls named María the teacher called her Mary Lopez.

3. Picking a favorite song María Isabel said she liked the one about the Hanukkah candles best.

4. Along with two of the boys María Isabel did not have a part in the pageant.

5. By writing her essay María Isabel convinced the teacher to call her by her full name.

Using Commas for Introductory Phrases

- A phrase is a small group of words that are not a complete sentence.

the new girl unfamiliar with the name

- A phrase at the beginning of a sentence is an introductory phrase. Writers use introductory phrases to vary sentence length and make sentences interesting.
- Use a comma to set off an introductory phrase at the beginning of a sentence.

After a time, María Isabel talked to her parents.

Living nearby, María Isabel was able to walk to school.

1. After moving across town María Isabel switched schools.

After moving across town, María Isabel switched schools.

2. With two other girls named María the teacher called her Mary Lopez.

With two other girls named María, the teacher called her Mary Lopez.

3. Picking a favorite song María Isabel said she liked the one about the Hanukkah candles best.

Picking a favorite song, María Isabel said she liked the one about the Hanukkah candles best.

4. Along with two of the boys María Isabel did not have a part in the pageant.

Along with two of the boys, María Isabel did not have a part in the pageant.

5. By writing her essay María Isabel convinced the teacher to call her by her full name.

By writing her essay, María Isabel convinced the teacher to call her by her full name.